Saturday, November 6. 1714.

London, November 6.

Yesterday arrived a Mail from Holland.

The Answer of his Most Christian Majesty to the Memorial which was presented to him by Mr. Prior, Plenipotentiary of the King of Great Britain, the 23d of October, 1714.

ACcording to the 9th Article of the Treaty of Peace concluded at Utrecht, the Port of Dunkirk between the Town and the Citadel is entirely filled up. They cease not however to transport thither the Earth produced from the Razement of the Cavaliers of the Citadel.

The Term Portus complearur can never be applied to the old Channel, which is quite different from the Port, and certainly the King could not engage to fill up entirely a Channel of 1000 Fathom long. That would be an immense Work, for 'tis impossible to work upon it but at low Tide. It would also be useless, for in a little time the Sea will carry away and spoil the rest of the Dykes or Banks.

These Dykes and the Jettees are daily broken down, and carried away by the Sea. It was lately demanded on the part of the King of Great Britain, that for the more speedy carrying them away, the King would make four Openings; his Majesty gave Order accordingly, and by that new Work the old Channel will in a few Days be so filled up, that it will be level with the Strand, and Ships will no longer be able to pass.

They cannot go up at high Water, but as they go generally along the Coast from Newport to Calais.

The King has many times complained of the Delays which England made in the Execution of the 9th Article of the Peace of Utrecht. It ought not therefore to be imputed to his Majesty. The Fact is publick.

It is also apparent that the Fortifications of Dunkirk are razed and the Channel filled up in such manner, that it would be impossible for the King to restore them, even altho' his Majesty would not, as he resolves he will, exactly comply with the Treaty.

His Majesty has already divers times answered to the Complaints which he received some time ago, concerning the Work which he was forced to make to hinder a great extent of Country from being overflowed and lost, which the Destruction of the Sluices of Dunkirk would have occasion'd: He will however again repeat the Explanations he has given upon that Subject.

The Waters of the Canals of Furnes, of La Moere, Bergue, and Bourbourg, run out by the Sluices of Dunkirk; this Stream was necessary to preserve from inevitable Inundation the Chatelenies of Bourbourg, Bergue, and even a part of that of Furnes; but the King having promised the total Destruction of the Sluices of Dunkirk, gave his Orders for executing the Treaty, and in the mean time let the Queen of Great-Britain know the Inconveniencies which a rigid Execution of it would produce; desiring her at the same time to consent that one of the three Sluices which were to be destroyed might be left standing. That Princess refused to do so. It was necessary therefore to seek some other way of letting out the Waters of those four Channels.

The English Commissaries and Ingineers have been Witnesses of the different Projects proposed to bring that to pass. They have an entire Knowledge of the Canal of Mardyke, and believed the Execution of it impossible: It is certain it has cost a vast Expence, and the King would have been glad to have laid it, if the Queen of Great Britain would have allowed, that one of the Sluices of Dunkirk should have been left standing, only for carrying off the Waters from the Country.

But upon her refusal it was necessary to open this Canal to receive the Waters of the other 4 Canals.

These four antient Canals are Navigable, and are together 48 Fathoms broad, and by Consequence the new Canal ought to be of a sufficient Breadth to receive all those Waters, and carry them into the Sea.

The Sluice also must necessarily be proportionate to the Breadth of the Canal and to the Quantity of Water which it contains; for it is employed to hinder the Tides from entring into the Country, and to keep up the Waters of the four antient Canals to the high Tides.

The Season of the Year pressed the speedy dispatch of the Work, for if it had not been carried on with great Diligence, there is all Reason to fear that the Autumn Rains would have caused great Disorder.

These are the Motives which have obliged the King to open the new Canal of Mardyke, and to press the Execution of the Work. His Majesty has no View, no Intention to make a new Port at Mardyke, or to build a Place there. He has already declared it, and he again repeats it, that he intended only to save the Country, which would have been overflowed if the Waters had not been let out to the Sea.

For the rest, the King has demonstrated his good Faith in the Execution of his Treaties. His Majesty has given particular Proofs to the King of Great Britain. He [illegible] with Pleasure the Assurances which [illegible] shews with him of observing religiously the Treaty of Utrecht, and maintaining with him a sincere Amity.

By the means of these happy Dispositions, it is easie to put a Stop to all Incidents which are capable of troubling a good Understanding.

The King doubts not that Understanding will be perfect, when all Suspicions shall be cleared up, and all Suppositions banished. 'Tis to this purpose that his Majesty was willing to repeat the Explanations contained in this Memorial, and orders the Sieur Iberville, his Envoy Extraordinary, to render an Account of it to the King of Great Britain. Nov. 2. 1714.

From the Leiden Gazette, dated Nov. 13.

Vienna, Oct. 31. Baron Gortz arrived here the 28th from Hermanstadt. Here are Letters from Walachia dated the 16th of this Month, which say that the King of Sweden has passed the Danube at Giaschow with 400 Men in his return home. General Lieven, who is sent before, has Orders to stop only 24 Hours at Cassel, and proceed with all possible Expedition to deliver the Letters he is charged with to General Welling at Hamburg. 'Tis said this General has brought his Swedish Majesty's Consent to the Marriage of the Princess Ulrica Eleonora his Sister with the Hereditary Prince of Hesse-Cassel.

From the Amsterdam Courant.

Vienna, Oct. 31. M. Fabritius, who went to meet the King of Sweden, returned hither on Sunday last, with the Holstein Minister Baron Gortz; his Majesty having let them know, that he will speak with no Man upon the Road, but would proceed incognito to Pomerania, where he will give them Audience. That Prince having passed the Danube, made some Stay at Pudnareth in Walachia, to receive his Troops who are marching from Bender. Five Turkish Agas attend him, and will wait on him to the Frontiers of Transylvania. But notwithstanding his Majesty's Declaration of Travelling incognito, Count Welseck is ordered to set out, to give Orders at least concerning the March of the Swedish Troops, and to see that all Accomodations his Majesty may have occasion for be duely prepared. In the mean time the Swedish Secretary Sternbeeck has notified to his Imperial Majesty, that the King his Master being sensible of the the great Friendship the Emperour has expressed in the many kind Offers he has made him, desires to maintain a reciprocal Freindship with his Majesty, and hopes that the Emperour will not only assist him with his Imperial Authority, but also help him with his Troops to recover what he has lost. The Emperour will shortly take a Turn to Presburg, but will stay but 3 Days there; whether this be to break up the Hungarian Diet, or to meet the King of Sweden, is not known; but 'tis certain that the Provedittore of the Court has sent a great Quantity of all sorts of Provisions to Count Welseck at Presburg. The Hungarian Protestants are pretty well satisfied, having obtained of the Emperour a Grant of more Favours than they expected.
